

Hidden Treasures

Well, well, what do we have here? Someone has overloaded the back of his pickup truck and is barreling down the road, ready to lose bits and pieces at the first big bump he encounters. So what's back there, anyhow? Let's see ... a bicycle, long stretch of a garden hose, a pair of shoes, and I think there's a kitchen sink under those chairs. Humm.

There is, kind reader, one item that sets this otherwise standard junk-filled-truck photo apart from the others. It's those shoes I mentioned. The ones on the left side of the bed, under the blanket. See 'em? If you look closely, you'll see that inside those shoes is a pair of feet, and connected to those feet is the live body of a not-so-bright in-duh-vidual wrapped up like a mummy. I kid thee not. You can see his arm just below the bicycle tire.

The blanket covering him is conveniently draped over the side of the truck, so that when it becomes entangled in the truck's wheel, he'll be snatched off the bed and onto the asphalt. Oh, but wait ... there's more! After taking this picture, our photographer said the in-duh-vidual sat up, along with his partner in slime. Yup, you heard me correctly ... two people were buried beneath that mess.

What can I say? There are some real dummies out there. Just don't be one of 'em. When you're transporting stuff in your truck, (and when you aren't transporting stuff, too, come to think of it), ride in the cab. It wouldn't take much for you to become a red smear on the road.
